

PUBLIC FED UP WITH LONG STRIKE IN STEEL REGIONS

Everyone Appears To Be Anxious To Have Industrial Peace Restored

BUSINESS IS HARD HIT

Public Discusses Both Sides of Controversy and Wonders Who Will Win

By James L. Kilgallen

WARREN, O., June 26.—(INS)—All along the seven-state "steel front"—and particularly in such embattled places as Warren, Ohio, South Chicago, Illinois, Monroe, Michigan, Youngstown, O., and Johnstown, Pa.—the public is fed up with the long drawn out steel strike and its turmoil, unrest and flare-ups of violence.

Reporters roving from one "hot spot" in the strike zone to another are finding this out. Each place they go they are met with the same questions: "When is the strike going to end?"

No one knows the answer. But it takes no great discernment to realize that the average working man in the businesses other than steel will give a sigh of relief when industrial peace is restored.

The small city merchant, the hotel owner, the motion picture theatre owner, the grocer, the barber and the little business men generally are weary of it all. In the towns most directly hit by the strike they are feeling the "pinch."

Newspapers all over the affected area are tired of headlining strike news but they can't escape it.

The residents of such communities as Warren, Ohio, and Johnstown, Pa., accepted the presence of National Guard troops, called out to preserve law and order, with resignation. But it was very easy to see they didn't like it.

There is great civic pride in Warren, a typical American small city, and Johnstown, a city which has gone through—the natives tell you—the depression, a disastrous flood and now the strike.

Johnstown, a "steel city," dependent on Bethlehem Steel Company payrolls for its prosperity, squirms under the long duration of the strike. The same is true of this attractive city of 45,000 whose principal industry is Republic Steel.

This city, under a modified form of martial law, today presented an appearance not much different from the average 45,000-population city. The people go about their business, apparently "as usual"—women visiting in the stores, traveling men making their rounds, Rotary and Kiwanis clubs holding their meetings.

But over the town, as is the case elsewhere, the spectre of the strike hangs gloomily. Business will not be right until the strike is ended. You hear it discussed everywhere. The people talk of John L. Lewis and his C.I.O., and of Tom Girdler, and they debate pro and con who is going to come out on top. But the uppermost hope of the average citizen is that somehow, some way the strike will be speedily settled.

National Guard officers, both in Ohio and Pennsylvania, have been operating in an unobtrusive manner as possible. There has been no military flair, no blatant display. The militia has kept more or less in the background yet never-the-less ready at a moment's notice to co-operate with the civil authorities in any emergency that might arise.

The situation in Warren today was quiet, with the civil authorities handling minor violations. Part of the militia patrolled the environs of the Republic plant and the rest were quartered at the armory and in American Legion Auditorium.

Farm School To Receive Large Sum, Samuel Estate

DOYLESTOWN, June 26.—The first accounting of the estate of Joseph Bunford Samuel shows that the National Farm School will eventually receive approximately $295,000. Accounting of the trustees was reviewed yesterday in Orphans' Court.

Mr. Samuel, who named the school as residuary legatee, died in 1929. The school will receive the estate at the termination of 14 annuities which are now being provided for, from funds held by Moncreur Biddle and the Land Title Bank & Trust Company as trustees. The late Mr. Samuel had a dwelling at 1609 Spruce street, Philadelphia, which he left to the Federation of Jewish Charities, and another at 1922 S. Rittenhouse Square. His cottage at Sea Girt, N. J., was given to the Jewish Foster Home.

INJURED BY SWING

The Steel Strike

Tramp of marching men — men marching back to their jobs — grew ever louder today in the Ohio sector of the steel strike. Soot-black clouds generated by newly-fired furnaces and symbolizing steady expansion of operations hung low over the Mahoning Valley.

Union leaders bitterly disputed that the strike in "little steel" had been broken by defection within their own ranks, whereby the group of non-strikers slipped quietly through the mill gates under the protection of armed militia men. Not more than 1,000 workers had returned this morning, they claimed.

Mill spokesmen were jubilant. More than 5,000 employees, they said, have marched back into the Valley plants of Republic Steel and Youngstown Sheet and Tube.

Increases in the number of returning workers was attributed on all sides to Governor Martin L. Davies' order that Ohio National Guardsmen protect all mill hands who went to work. From the CIO leaders came belligerent denunciations of the Governor's action as an attempt to "break" the strike.

Today the situation was quiet both in Youngstown and Johnstown. At the latter city, preparations were being pushed to re-open the giant plant of Bethlehem steel, closed last week by martial law which now has been lifted. Tentative re-opening has been set for Monday.

HISTORICAL SIDE OF TILE IS PRESENTED

In Early Egypt, Glazing Went With Working of Copper Ores, Rotarians Told

ANDERSON IS SPEAKER

In delivering an address before members of Bristol Rotary Club at the home of Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Fleckenshtein, Newportville, Thursday, Robert E. Anderson, factory manager of The Art Tile Company, Morrisville, told of the manufacture of tile.

Mr. Anderson's address in full follows:

In this brief talk on tile I am going to consider it in the sense of decorative floor and wall tile and not in the sense of any cruder clay tiles such as roofing tile.

There are as already mentioned two distinct classes of tile as to use: namely, floor tile and wall tile. This distinction, however, is rapidly disappearing since both are used today interchangeably. For example, in the Chrysler Building in New York, the floors and wainscots are both being installed with floor tile. On the other hand, glazed wall tiles are used also on floors in order to get the proper color harmony with the walls.

Now let us turn to the historical side of tile and see where and when it originated.

In Egypt, in the pre-historic age, glazing went together with the working of copper ores and probably accidental slugs in the smelting gave the first idea of using glaze intentionally. The development of glazing at the beginning of the Dynasties about 3,300 B. C., was quite rapid. Large tiles 12" square were glazed all over and used to line the walls of rooms, being held in place by deep dove tails and ties of copper wires. It was also customary during this period for the better

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS VERY LIGHT ON FIRST OF THREE DAYS SET ASIDE BY THE COMMISSION; ABOUT ONE-THIRD OF COUNTY RETURNS ARE IN

Registration of voters in Bucks County for the first time under the new Permanent Registration Act yesterday proceeded at a slow pace and in some of the districts the work was not completed until nearly midnight.

Due to the new system of registration, the time required to ascertain from the voters the answers to the questions, inspection of naturalization papers and the filling out of the registration blanks, kept the registrars exceedingly busy, not only for the scheduled eight hours they were required to sit at the polling places but some of them worked until after midnight.

No figures of county-wide results were obtainable this morning. The registrars were reporting to the Registration Commission at Doylestown and at 10 o'clock about one-third had returned their cards. It was planned to keep the commission office open until late this evening, so as to receive the returns as quickly as possible. It is believed that tabulation of results will require several days.

The following figures are unofficial having been tabulated after a quick survey of the districts given:

PLAN TO PRESENT FLAG TO CROYDON CUB SCOUTS

Bucks County Chapter of The D. A. R. Ends 12th Year

RECIPROCITY LUNCHEON

WASHINGTON CROSSING, June 26.—It was voted at the reciprocity luncheon held here this week by the Bucks County Chapter, D. A. R., to present flags to the Croydon Cub Scouts troop and also to the troop at Riegelsville.

The Chapter this week ended its 12th year. The luncheon was attended by 22 members, 19 guests, including the regents of seven neighboring chapters, and several state officers and chairmen of state committees.

In the absence of the state and chapter chaplains, the vice regent, Mrs. J. Herman Barnsley, read the invocation from the D. A. R. ritual, and Mrs. Harriet Tomb, a past regent, led the salute to the flag.

Following the luncheon the present regent, Mrs. Samuel S. Paxson, welcomed the guests and recalled briefly the Revolutionary history of this spot, which made it so appropriate for such a gathering.

She then introduced Mrs. Horace M. Jones, State treasurer and national chairman of Americanism, who gave a short talk on "Americanism," suggesting what "we, as individuals can do to promote good citizenship through our homes, our schools, and our communities."

The next speaker, Mrs. Joseph G. Forney, state chairman of the D. A. R. approved schools, told of her inspiring visit to the Kate Duncan Smith School in the mountains of Alabama at the time of the dedication of the Log Library, a gift to the school from the Pennsylvania Daughters.

Mrs. Howard Cupitt, state chairman of better films, spoke of propaganda, good and bad, in motion pictures, and recommended a short film, entitled, "We, the People," as one which every American should see.

The state recording secretary, Mrs. Birch, considered religion of even greater importance than patriotism if Americans are to combat Socialism, Communism, Fascism and Nazism.

Mrs. N. Howland Brown, ex-state regent and ex-vice president general, gave a word of greeting.

The last speaker to be presented was Mrs. Ira Springer, state vice regent, who told how much the State D. A. R. student loan fund, in the three years of its existence, has aided girls and boys in going to college. Mrs. Springer urged every chapter to celebrate, in some way, the 150th anniversary of the adoption of the constitution on next September 17th. "Our constitution," she said, "is a great living thing which can be amended, but never changed." After speaking of the present state of unrest everywhere, Mrs. Springer concluded by saying, "If the time should come when we must strike, let us be prepared to stand for God, our homes, and the right."

Mrs. Paxson invited those who cared to do so to motor to Bowman's Hill for the dedication of the Washington elm tree, planted some months ago in the Wild Flower Preserve. Mrs. Barnsley led the ceremony for dedicating trees as given in the D. A. R. ritual and Mrs. Ely read two short poems.

Prior to the luncheon the annual business meeting was held at which time the following were appointed to the State convention at Harrisburg in October: Delegates, Mrs. Alden B. Owen, Mrs. Isaac J. Vanartsdalen, Mrs. William J. Leattor, Mrs. Harriet Tomb and Mrs. Harold T. Green, Alternates, Mrs. Frank M. Acton, Mrs. E. Y. Barnes, Mrs. R. Page Crawford, Mrs. Harry E. Carver, Mrs. Charles Cramer.

RURAL AUCTIONS

The auction is a distinctly rural institution. The city has adopted it for the disposal of bankrupt stocks and valuable art works, but the trade auction is still only to be found on the farm and in the village.

"Flittings" are often the occasion for auctions, for the disposal of the surplus household goods and farm stocks and implements. It is one sure way country folks have of raising quick cash.

Then there is the auction that is a second funeral; they bury all that is left of one branch of the family and then auction the possessions of a lifetime, or what is left of them after the nearest of kin have taken what they want.

If the day is bright and the auctioneer merry the sale is a social event. With the restraint of ownership removed everybody tramps through the house prying into closets and cupboards, peering into broken jars for forgotten money, fingering linens and snickering over the ornamental treasures. And when the hammer falls on the kitchen table, the auctioneer is bursting with humor and every one's funny-bone is unusually sensitive.

Unless the household boasts of some "genu-ine antiques," which will be gobbled up at fancy prices by dealers or city collectors, the sale of Aunt Sophia's parlor suit, which was her first and last, and feather beds and crocks and curios will not bring enough money to start a modern bridal couple to house-keeping in parlor, bedroom and bath.

But relatives have been back on the old farm, friends who have not seen each other for years have revived old friendships and the possessions of one of the old families have been distributed.

LIGHTNING

Lightning to different people is a different thing. Some are filled with awe, others fright. To the scientist lightning offers opportunity for interesting study.

In the days since Benjamin Franklin's experiments, scientists have discovered that lightning is preceded by a pilot flash from the clouds which serves to clear away resistance for the major discharge, which is the one we see as it travels from earth to sky. This process is repeated until the electricity in that particular area is expended. A flash comes and goes in the fifty millionths of a second and engineers have estimated the value of electricity expended in each at about twenty cents.

They have also computed that there are 360,000 strokes in the world each hour or a total energy output greater than that generated by Niagara. But how to harness this tremendous force. That's the problem.

The military calling becomes more complicated, says a general. As in Spain, where they settle up after the stud poker sessions in five different currencies.

The third degree method of getting confessions is considered brutal, except when parents use it on Junior.

A vice is anything you begin doing for pleasure and keep doing as a habit when the pleasure is gone.

On the wonderful sports pages, one may be boy wonder of the cue at 38 or a golfing comeback at 25!

"BLACK ORCHIDS" by F. V. W. MASON

SYNOPSIS

Ian Gray, First Secretary to the American Minister to Austria and his friend, Leonard Holt, are sitting with a group of officers on the terrace of the famous Hotel Duna-Palota, when the conversation turns to the fascinating Countess Lolita von Waldeck. Several broken hearts are attributed to Lolita and d'Armonot, one of the officers, claims a fatal duel was fought on her account. Leonard cannot stand the insinuations and comes to Lolita's defense. Ian wonders at his friend's interest for Leonard is engaged to Ilya Zichony, charming daughter of a Hungarian minister. That night, Leonard borrows $1000 from Ian who wonders what his friend wants with such a large sum. Arriving early for dinner at the Austrian Ministry, Ian waits in the conservatory. After a short while, the most beautiful woman he ever saw appears. Unobserved from his nook, Ian sees her cry. From the house a man calls "Lolita," and, drying her tears, the girl goes inside. Later, Ian sees her surrounded by eager gallants and asks for an introduction. He is stunned to learn she is the notorious Countess von Waldeck.

CHAPTER IV

To cover his mounting color he bowed so low that the row of miniature medals and decorations glittering on his left lapel of his dress suit clinked softly.

"It is a great honor," he managed to articulate, "to meet the beautiful Countess von Waldeck." When for the first time their eyes met fair and true, Ian was conscious of strange exhilaration. What the devil? Vainly he tried to read beyond those clear and tranquil blue eyes.

"Monsieur is English or an American," she stated softly. "Dien, I am sure of it; else by now you would have made a dozen gallant speeches which mean nothing and bore one so terribly."

"Yes," he stammered, and cursed his sudden uncertainty. Damn it, he, Ian Gray, was as embarrassed as any school boy speaking in public for the first time! "I am at the American Ministry."

"Oh," Her lips formed a perfect, ruby-blossomed smile, then her face lit. "Ah, I have it—you must be Ian, that friend of whom Leonard Holt tells me so much."

"Leonard talks too much—it's a failing he has. I—I hope he hasn't been telling tales out of school."

Laughing lightly the girl in the Luvius ball gown held up a slender blue veined forefinger and tilted her blonde head just a little to one side. "Is this a ruddy conscience, Monsieur? But I will set your fears at rest. Monsieur Holt has painted you as the beau sabreur par excellence—a sort of modern Bayard."

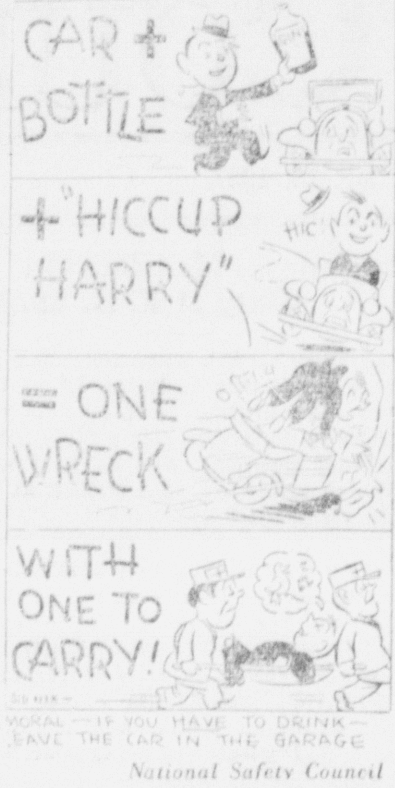

"Lord forgive him for those lies," laughed Ian and drew breath to further pursue the conversation when a new contingent of guests arrived. Among them were the gay Captain d'Armonot and, as sharp a contrast as might be found, Major Harris. When they beheld him standing somewhat dazed on the outskirts of the throng hemming in the fragile beauty of Countess von Waldeck, they both treated him to a mocking lift of the eyebrows.

"Crez nom de Dieu—you waste no time!" cried Captain d'Armonot, very dark and picturesque in his artillery dress uniform of black and red. "Remember about the fools who duced?"

"Rushed stunning girl. Singular purity of face and form. Eh what? Doesn't look a bit like the siren I've heard about—more like some nice girl who's just put up her hair and let down her skirts. Refreshingly fresh, eh what?"

Ian noted that even the usually somber eyes of the big boned Welshman lit when, for a moment, the throng of those pleading for introduction parted to afford a glimpse of that laughing girl whom the other young women were undoubtedly be-

Commencement Speeches
All Warn of Rooseveltism
Poor Joe Double-Crossed

Fashions in commencement addresses, like all else, change with the times. Far from dwelling on abstract ethical problems or general compulsions affecting individual conduct, the 1937 crop sounds as if it had been delivered at a current events course. No names are mentioned in these academic admonitions, but the thoughts of speakers seem to be focused on the actions, and the consequences of the actions, of a single Harvard graduate, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The Chief Justice of the United States, attending a commencement luncheon at Amherst, was cheered to the echo when he said: "Sometimes crusaders have more fervor than wisdom." Assuring his auditors that he would not touch on current affairs, Mr. Hughes observed that Democratic government cannot be made efficient "under the will of one man."

At Princeton President Dodds denounced security as a false goal. The totalitarian state said to the individual, according to Dr. Dodds: "Where you as individuals have failed, I can predict wisely; I am the all-inclusive spiritual personality endowed with the mysterious gift of omniscience. You have only to trust me."

At Harvard President Canant described the growth in Europe of Bolshevism, Fascism, Nazism, civil war in Spain. "And when we turn our glance from Europe and examine our own country, what do we find? A serene and tolerant atmosphere? Quite the contrary—we find the contending worlds right here within the United States."

At Yale retiring President Angell was even more specific. He told his baccalaureate audience that the national government had appeared as a partisan in the current industrial conflict, charged the Executive with having encouraged existing disorder, reduced Congress "to the position of mere puppets," and, in the judicial reform plan, attempted a "rape of the Constitution." This, in Dr. Angell's belief, was revolution, and on one man must rest the principal blame.

Commencement speeches such as these are far removed from the rather unctuous apothegms on post-graduate life that it was the custom to deliver not so long ago. If the baccalaureate pulpit has acquired some aspects of a public forum, this is but a reflection of a national mood and temper, in which the citizen, either with an academic background or without, is becoming more and more aware that legislation, as now conceived, and government as now administered, are not alien to him.

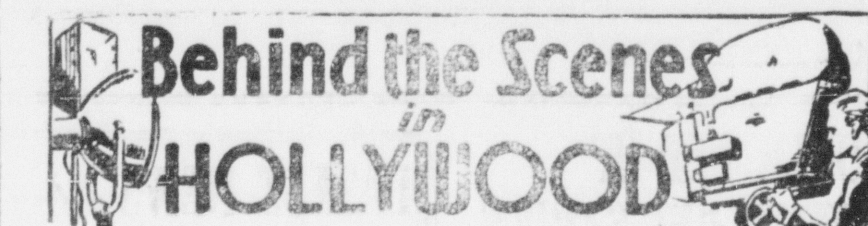

Has the news been permitted to percolate through to "Arkansas Joe" Robinson that he is not destined for the glory of the Supreme Court after all?

Of course, few of the more sophisticated ever believed Joe would make it, despite his complete obeisance to the One On High in the last four years. Joe scrapped his scruples and went down the line "yessing" Roosevelt, and his reward may well prove to be the satisfaction of having been a cuckold.

When Joe submitted his amendment to the $1,500,000,000 relief bill, providing that states pay 25 per cent of the cost of projects, he was led to believe the Administration—that is to say, Roosevelt—wanted this as a substitute for the Byrnes amendment, requiring states to put up 40 per cent. His disillusionment must have been quite a shock when Senator Barkley took charge of the opposition for the administration and had it voted down by two to one.

Joe, for the first time in four years, was out on a limb and had committed the great error of opposing Roosevelt, when he thought he was carrying out the Boss's orders. This method of putting a too ambitious disciple in his place has been worked before under Roosevelt and those who have noth-

HOLLYWOOD—A heartache to Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond on their honeymoon is the bitterness of his mother, Mrs. Mary Kipling, about their marriage.

She was in town on the day of the ceremony but, as itomed here, did not attend. She called me to tell "her side" of the story. It is a tale of family estrangement that I have no wish to air in detail here. Raymond's friends passionately defend him. They say the actor gave his mother $30,000 in cash and an $85,000 house. And has contributed other sums of money since.

One of her purposes in coming to California, Mrs. Kipling tells me, is to sell this house. Later on, she says, she hopes to become a lecturer. She employs a secretary and is now located at a Hollywood hotel.

A certain Hollywood producer must be burning. He recently ended up a picture at a major studio as the most disliked man on the lot. Arriving in New York to sail for a European vacation, he received an unsigned telegram. It read: "Happy double-crossing!"

Too sad about the passing of Al Boasberg. In the early days of this column, he was one of our chief contributors. Later on, studios offered him so much money for his gags that he couldn't afford to give the good ones away. Radio, especially since he went to work on the Jack Benny program, had brought Al to the verge of the promised land. On the day he died from heart disease, he signed a contract with Benny at $1,200 a week. It required only two days work and allowed him to accept any picture assignments.

Al didn't even know anything was the matter with him. He was supposed to move into a new house on the first of July. On the night before his death, he told a friend: "I'm going to take it easy for the rest of my life."

To the superstitious, the passing of Boasberg completes another

Hollywood cycle of three. Harlow and Monroe Owsley were the others.

Mary Pickford's wedding gown will be of blue and brown shades and not very brideish. Omar Kiam is designing it.

Answering Your Questions! Cleo Samuels, San Jose: Sonja Henie is succumbing to the building urge like the rest. She plans to put up a house on San Jacinto mountain, 8,000 feet above Palm Springs.

Amusing note on Robert Taylor. The star wanted to ride his black stallion in the parade at the San Fernando fiesta, but was fearful of being mobbed by fans. The committee finally agreed not to publicize his presence, so Bob went through with it.

Anita Louise has fooled the gossips many times, but some day she will be the next Hollywood beauty to marry a doctor. The medico is named Henry and Anita is not only interested in him but in his work. Has made several trips to the General hospital to see him operate.

Incidentally, another of Anita's set, Paula Stone, is about these days with a doctor. His name is William Gamble.

The new Marion Davies picture, "Ever Since Eve," is one of the best light comedies of the season. It was a laugh from start to finish to a preview audience at Warner Brothers.

Ever Since Eve, is one of the best light comedies of the season. It was a laugh from start to finish to a preview audience at Warner Brothers. Patsy Kelly, Allen Jenkins, Frank McHugh and Louise Fazenda scored strong personal successes. The film is perfect summer entertainment and will win a lot of new fans for Miss Davies. Her natural gifts for comedy were never more spontaneously employed than in this picture. She plays a pretty secretary who disguises herself in a wig and frumpy clothes to ward off the advances of men. The two parts are played with a difference that goes deeper than the physical disguise. It is a sound job of acting on the star's part and helps the illusion mightily.

BRISTOL COURIER

Lower Bucks County's Only Daily Newspaper

Yes, the Director of the Family Budget has discovered a valuable secret when she passed the word along that she shops with the Courier!

She read the advertisements in this paper with care and consideration. They form her research data. By means of them she makes her purchases so that she well deserves the title of "Director of the Family Budget." She discovers item after item as the years roll on, and the friends who learn her secret are happy, indeed.

With approximately 3500 families getting the Courier every week-day, which means 14,000 readers, merchants will find that it has pulling power to make new friends, new customers and new profits, just as the housewife has found that she can shop with greater ease and greater savings by reading the Bristol Courier.

STROMP HURLS TO VICTORY OVER TRENTON SOCCER IX

Effective in the pinches, Ralph Stromp hurled the Superior Zinc Corporation nine to a 4-1 victory over the Trenton Soccer Club, last evening, on Leedom's field. It was the bearing down of Stromp in the clutch that gave the zinc smelters the triumph.

Stromp's mates were very erratic behind his good pitching and kept him in trouble all during the game but he managed to escape being scored upon in every inning except the second. Johnny McCue had two of the winners' five hits and "Reds" Cummings drove him two runs with a double.

LANDRETHS LOSE, DESPITE GOOD WORK ON THE MOUND

Al Carey, star hurler for the Bordentown Eagles last season and at the present time a member of the R. D. Wood team of Florence, hurled a "believe it or not" game last night.

Pitching for the Landreth's Seeds against the North City Legion nine, Carey failed to allow a single base blow, yet when the final tabulations were in the Landrethmen were defeated, 3-1.

The tilt, played at 19th Street and Olney avenue, was completed in the fast time of one hour and 20 minutes.

Landreth's meets Riverside tomorrow afternoon on the home diamond at 3:15 o'clock and women will be admitted free.

Mrs. Ely and Mrs. Crough were appointed to audit the treasurer's report. The chapter recently presented to the Melinda Cox Library a book entitled "Immigrant to Inventor," by Alexander Pupin.

A prize of $5 for the best essay on the subject, "How the Study of American History Will Help to Carry Out My Obligations as an Individual to My Community, My State and My Nation," was awarded to Anna Rosenberger, of Hilltown Township High School. Another written by a pupil of Nockamixon High School, was such a close second that it was given honorable mention.

The few annual reports were brief, except that of the historian, Mrs. Herman W. Burgher, who read an interesting account of the chapter's progress and accomplishments during the year, which will be recorded as another chapter in the "History of Bucks County Chapter, D. A. R."

Historical Side of Tile is Presented

classes of peoples to use tiles on which were inscribed monograms or family seals as calling cards.

Not much development took place in the glazing of tile until 4,000 years later.

In the 11th and 12th centuries the Mausoleums of Persia brought the art of glazed tiles to great perfection and used the same on a large scale, chiefly, though not always, for internal wall decoration. The tiles were of a thick earthenware or porous body covered with a white enamel. These were in various shapes but mostly in some form of a star arranged so as to fit closely together. Delicate and intricate patterns were then painted on the tiles. After the first firing in a copper like color with a strong metallic lustre which was produced by the dioxidation of a metallic salt during the second firing.

Another important class of wall tiles were those manufactured by the Spanish Moors, especially during the 14th century. These are in a very different style, being designed to suggest or imitate mosaics. They have intricate geometrical patterns marked out by lines in slight relief and then brilliant enamel colors were burned into the tiles, the projecting lines forming boundaries for the color enamels. They were used mainly for dados often surmounted by bands of tile with inscriptions. The most beautiful example of these Moorish tiles are to be seen in Alhambra, at Granada, and in the Alcazar, at Seville. Many other buildings in Southern Spain are tiled the same as these two as late as the 16th century.

Still another type of glazed tile was the Kashli tile, manufactured in Persia and parts of Mahomedan during the 16th and 17th centuries. Most authorities describe the Kashli tile as the mosaic tile work. That is where small pieces of glazed tiles are used to create all kinds of designs and figures. The Kashli tile were made up into conventional designs of foliage, flowers, fruit, intricate geometrical figures, Arabesques and inscriptions in Arabic and Persia. The finest examples of this tile are found in the Punjab and Sind Provinces of India, notably at the Mosque of Wazer Khan, erected in 1634.

Floor Tiles

After the development of painted and lustered tiles in Spain for the decoration of wall surfaces they were also introduced during the latter part of the 15th and 16th centuries as floor coverings, especially in the chapels of the famous cathedrals in this country.

However long before the Southern nations of Europe were introducing this tile a much more practical tile was in use in Germany, France and England. Of these the English encaustic tiles, dating from the early years of the 13th to the end of the 16th century, are particularly important and beautiful.

With the downfall of Henry, VIII. about 1550, the making of encaustic tiles appears to have come to a temporary end and for nearly two centuries foreign tiles were imported from Germany, Holland, Italy and Spain. The most important of these imported tiles were the famous Delft tiles, done in blue glaze decorations on white, the same as we now see on Delft china.

During the 17th and 18th centuries the old painted and decorated floor tiles seem to have been replaced by the more common buff and red quarries so largely used in the English farm houses, kitchens and dairies. But it is to the painted tiles for walls and fire places that we have to look for the progress of the art.

The modern revival of tile making in Europe dates from about 1830 when Samuel Wright, a Shelton potter, was granted a patent for the manufacture of tile by mechanical means. From these English methods we have developed our modern processes.

The real boom to the tile industry and its extensive use was brought about by the introduction of the modern bathroom. Early in the 19th century it was often the case of a human being, royal, noble and commoner, going through life without a bath. It was Catherine of Russia (and she was not fastidious) compelled her imperial consort to take a bath. To do so it was necessary for her to cause the Imperial Council to pass an ordinance compelling the Emperor to bathe once a year; to which he protested violently, asserting it would endanger his life.

In the mid 19th century the better class Britisher really instituted the common practice of the "morning tub," which was laughed at for a long period of time. The "tub" consisted of a shallow metal dish two or three feet across, containing a bucket or two of cold water in which the bather sat with his legs outside and sponged himself off. From this developed the bathroom and the modern bath tub. When this was instituted it was found necessary to increase the sanitary conditions by the use of glazed wall surfaces and floors.
